

ABSTRACT

A method and apparatus for shuttling, managing, and controlling energy flow between suppliers and users based on bid/ask pricing, wherein individual residential/commercial suppliers are aggregated for the purpose of supply and use, and wherein an electricity transmission utility controls the selection and flow of energy from suppliers to users via a controlling device, such as, for exemplary purposes only, a switch turned on by commands sent over a data net to multiple locations simultaneously.